WILLIAM PEACE, PEACE DESIGN

A long, curved sofa swept visitors into the cozy paneled library. Designer William Peace was inspired by a collection of wooden bowls by the Moulthrop—three generations of Atlanta wood carvers—and displayed the coveted pieces throughout the space. “I wanted the room to be warm, rich and somewhat masculine,” says Peace, “since the rest of the house is light and more feminine.” To enliven the traditional space, he hung an oversize red and white encaustic painting, and added a mirrored coffee table for shine to contrast with the tactile fabrics, artwork and books.
